LOOK AGAIN – A POEM BY MARY OLIVER

What you have never noticed about the toad, probably,
is that his tongue is attached not to the back of his mouth but the front-how far it extends when the fly hesitates on a near-enough leaf.
Or that his front feet, which are sometimes padded, hold three nimble digits — had anyone a piano small enough I think the toad could learn to play something, a little Mozart maybe, inside the cool cellar of the sandy hill — and if the eyes bulge they have gold rims, and if the smile is wide it never fails, and the warts, the delicate uplifts of dust-colored skin, are neither random nor suggestive of dolor, but rather are little streams of jewelry, in patterns of espousal and pleasure, running up and down their crooked backs, sweet and alive in the sun.

Words of Wisdom

There is no greatness where there is not simplicity, goodness & truth.

To be full of things is to be empty of God.

Scatter joy.

PLEASE TAKE THIS HOME WITH YOU AS YOU LEAVE
