Sixth Sunday of Easter

STAR GAZER

BY Louis MacNeice (1907-1963)

Forty-two years ago (to me if to no one else
The number is of some interest) it was a brilliant starry night

And the westward train was empty and had no corridors
So darting from side to side I could catch the unwonted sight

Of those almost intolerably bright
Holes, punched in the sky, which excited me partly because Of their Latin names and partly because I had read in the textbooks

How very far off they were, it seemed their light
Had left them (some at least) long years before I was.

And this remembering now I mark that what Light was leaving some of them at least then,

Forty-two years ago, will never arrive
In time for me to catch it, which light when
It does get here may find that there is not Anyone left alive

To run from side to side in a late night train
Admiring it and adding noughts in vain.
