LITTLE SKELLIG

For Paul Cannon

By Moya Cannon *

It is not difficult to believe a little, in archangels here as golden-headed gannets swoop around our lurching boat.

They are poised
as spray-blown row upon row of cherubim,
along the ledges
of a tooth of sandstone, which, for centuries,
has been whitewashed with guano until its galleries are luminous, clamorous as New York or Singapore.

The boatman in his yellow coat restarts the engine and twists for home.
Salt water washes across the deck then one gannet plummets and there is something about the greed and grace of that cruciform plunge which shouts out
To our unfeathered bones.
